The latest interpretation of the illegality defence in the Cayman Islands

In the long-awaited decision of Ahmad Hamad Algosaibi and Brothers Company ('AHAB') v SAAD Investments Company Limited (In Official Liquidation) (SICL) and Others, the Cayman Court dismissed AHAB's claims of fraud alleged against Mr Al Sanea's Cayman companies. In doing so, numerous complex areas of the law concerning commercial fraud and the ability to trace assets through corporate groups and into sophisticated financial products were considered.

Further developments in legal privilege: lessons for Jersey

Following the landmark English judgment in SFO v. ENRC [2018] EWCA Civ 2006 (as reported in our previous briefing), there have been two further significant judgments on litigation privilege. These will potentially be persuasive authorities in Jersey in this area, and should be noted by all litigants, including directors of trustees and companies in trust structures.

Not in dispute - Cayman's leading role in cross-border dispute resolution

Each year, legal disputes over assets worth many billions of dollars worldwide are resolved in courtrooms and boardrooms in the Cayman Islands. The jurisdiction has a reputation for dealing with complex financial services and commercial litigation based on the relevance of its legislation, the reliability of its court system, and the experience of the professionals who work here.

Guernsey Royal Court rules on prohibition order

In the case of Y v Chairman of the GFSC, the Guernsey Royal Court heard how an individual (Mr Y) used his employer's license with the GFSC to carry out company registrations for the clients of his own private accountancy practice. Mr Y's accountancy practice did not have the relevant permission from the GFSC to incorporate companies for clients.
